In a small village, there lived a poor family in an old, crumbling house passed down through generations, desperately in need of repairs.

This tiny house consisted of three cramped rooms, a broken water-heating bathroom, and a kitchen with a cracked ceiling.

The head of this unfortunate family was a sick carpenter who could barely earn enough to keep himself and his family alive.

This carpenter had fallen ill with a strange condition that no doctor could diagnose, causing his health to deteriorate further.

Until one day, a strange man arrived in the village — known as a "mad scientist" — who crafted bizarre concoctions and tested them on people for generous sums of money.

By the time this doctor arrived, the carpenter's condition had worsened, and a heavy rainstorm had caused the house's roof to collapse almost completely, leaving the home utterly uninhabitable.

Upon hearing about the carpenter's plight, the doctor quickly made him his new test subject, offering him a strange new remedy that he claimed could cure any illness.

After that, he decided to leave the old house and move to a new one, planning to buy the necessary tools and build it himself using the money he had earned.
